WILMINGTON

Port workers begin tree planting

POLA personnel planted more than a dozen trees at Wilmington's Bayview Field as part of the port's commitment to plant nearly 6,000 trees in four years.

With help from other agencies, officials hope to plant trees along Wilmington streets leading to the port to provide shade and greenery to the neighborhood.

Almost 2,000 trees are planned for the Wilmington waterfront buffer area and corridor extending from Wilmington's downtown business district to Banning's Landing.
